

Cynicism has no place in India's democratic progress: PM Modi

(Gns). Prime Minister Narendra Modi on Thursday said cynicism has no place in India's democratic progress.

Responding to an article written by Union Minister Hardeep Singh Puri in an English daily, the Prime Minister's Office (PMO) in a post on X said, "India welcomes robust, evidence-based criticism that strengthens policy and protects reform."

"Cynicism has no place in our democratic progress! This write-up by Union Minister Shri @HardeepSPuri reflects constructive debate that can prove to be a boon for this new year," the PMO further said in the post on X.

Earlier, Puri said India's democracy benefits by criticism, but not by motivated fatalism by some "experts," who seem more guided by their politics rather than academic rigour.

He further stated that each of the above assertions do not stand the scrutiny of facts.

"Under the leadership of Prime Minister Narendra Modi, India has chosen the harder path of execution, and it is the results, audited in numbers and felt in households, that will outlast any brief for despair," Puri added.

The minister wrote that "as we step into 2026, public debate in India should begin with a little New Year discipline."

"We should welcome

scrutiny, even sharp criticism, but we should also insist that the argument carries responsibility. A republic of over 1.4 billion through the unglamorous grind of design, implementation, correction, and scale. A New Year is also a moment to separate sceptiwork of reform to caricature, treats every imperfect transition as proof of permanent failure, and offers a familiar consolation: India is supposedly doomed by its own policymakers.

That posture weakens trust in statistics and markets, encourages fatalism among entrepreneurs and investors, and hands outside actors a ready-made script for pressuring India in negotiations. Expertise must remain answerable to facts," Puri further stated.

"It is worrying to whom I have known personally and who have anchored their identity and credibility in India, are now trying to make a career out of badmouthing the country," he added.

The minister further highlighted that the charge that India's datasets are uniquely unreliable sits uneasily with the direction of travel. The GST created a national invoice trail and a compliance culture that simply did not exist a decade ago. Digital payments created another audit footprint. In November 2025, UPI recorded 20 billion transactions worth over Rs 26 lakh crore. These are large, verifiable systems, and they expand the space for measurement, cross-checks, and course correction.

"Measured outcomes in welfare and inclusion further puncture this fatalism. NITI Aayog's National Multidimensional Poverty Index shows almost 24 crore Indians moved out of multidimensional poverty between 2013-14 and 2022-23, with the incidence falling from nearly 30 per cent to about 11 per cent.

"Direct Benefit Transfer tightened delivery, with cumulative transfers crossing Rs 45 lakh crore in 2025 and savings of more than Rs 3.5 lakh crore through leakage reduction over the DBT period.

Financial inclusion is now a mass infrastructure, with over 56 crore Jan Dhan accounts," he added.

Prime Minister's Vision of 'Health and Wellness for All' Gains Further Momentum

Gandhinagar, 08 January 2026: Chief Minister Shri Bhupendra Patel inaugurated the Cancer Screening Van – Asha Van, in Gandhinagar, which is vital for early primary detection of cancer.

This Asha Van has been donated to the Bhavnagar branch of the Indian Red Cross Society by Jenburkta Pharmaceutical. The van is equipped with EVA-Pro diagnostics, a mammography unit, and expert tele-consultation facilities. Additionally, screening for diseases such as lung cancer, oral cancer, blood cancer, cervical cancer, pancreatic cancer as well as liver cancer, breast and prostate cancer will be possible on-site through this van using ultra-modern instrumentation. This Asha Van will help strengthen Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi's goal of "Health and Wellness for All" at the rural level.

Debate Returns as Mahayuti and MVA Face Off Ahead of BMC Polls

Mumbai development record

Between 2014 and 2019, when Devendra Fadnavis served as Chief Minister, several long pending infrastructure proposals moved from files to execution. Projects stalled for years received approvals, Metro corridors expanded, planning for the coastal road progressed and construction began on the Mumbai Trans Harbour Link, later named Atal Setu. Supporters describe this phase as one of Mumbai's most decisive infrastructure pushes in recent decades.

Those backing the Fadnavis government say administrative clearances were quicker and decision making was decisive, helping shape a broader vision for transport and connectivity. They argue that the pace set during this period became evident when political leadership later changed, pointing to shifting timelines for tunnels, bridges and the underground Metro 3.

Under Uddhav Thackeray leadership

Critics of the 2019 to 2022 Uddhav Thackeray led Mahavikas Aghadi government allege that development momentum slowed considerably. They describe the coalition as being driven by power sharing rather than execution, claiming that infrastructure slipped down the priority list as internal coordination became central.

Societal Oversight

The murder of a young man from the Northeast in a northern Indian city is not just a crime; it is a mirror held up to a society that still struggles to recognise all its citizens as its own. The shock lies not only in the violence itself, but in how familiar the conditions around it feel to those who come from India's eastern frontiers. The slurs, the stares, the casual questioning of identity ~ these are not exceptions. They are routine. For decades, people from the Northeast have lived with a quiet, grinding burden: the need to constantly explain themselves. Where are you from? Are you Chinese?

Are you Nepali? Are you even Indian? These questions are asked with a confidence that would be comical if it were not so corrosive. They reveal a disturbing truth ~ that for many, the idea of India still stops at the Siliguri Corridor. This ignorance is not innocent. It is sustained by an education system that treats the Northeast as an afterthought, by media that parachutes in only during conflict, and by a political imagination that sees the region either as a security problem or an exotic postcard. When a population is reduced to stereotype, it becomes easier to deny its humanity.

And when humanity is denied, violence finds permission. What makes such incidents especially painful is their banality. There is no grand ideology required, no elaborate conspiracy. A remark, a taunt, an argument ~ and suddenly a life is gone. This is not the violence of riots or mass movements. It is the violence of everyday prejudice, acted out in narrow lanes and crowded markets, far from the glare of cameras. That is what should unsettle us most. Migration is often held up as proof of integration. Young people from the Northeast study, work and build lives across the country. They speak local languages, adapt to local customs, contribute to local economies.

Yet, they remain perpetual outsiders. The promise of mobility has not translated into the promise of belonging. Instead, it has exposed them to new vulnerabilities, far from the protection of familiar communities. There is also a cruel irony at play. India prides itself on diversity ~ of language, food, dress, belief. But diversity is celebrated only when it is decorative. When it challenges the dominant image of what an "Indian" looks like, it is met with discomfort, suspicion, even hostility.

The same difference that is applauded on cultural stages becomes a liability on the street. If we are honest, this is a failure of the national project. Unity cannot be built on maps alone. It has to live in everyday interactions ~ in classrooms, workplaces, neighbourhoods. It requires curiosity instead of contempt, learning instead of labelling. A young man should never have to assert his nationality with his dying breath. That sentence alone should shame us into reflection. Until the Northeast is woven into the Indian story not as a margin but as a centre, such tragedies will keep returning.

Somnath Swabhiman Parv - A Symbol of India's Self-Respect

Somnath Swabhiman Parv Showcases Historic Insights for Participating Visitors

Gandhinagar, 08 January 2026: The Somnath Swabhiman Parv, to be held under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi, will serve as a national resolve linking India's ancient and unbroken cultural legacy with the present and the future. Alongside the grandeur of the Somnath Temple, centuries of history are deeply interwoven. In India's cultural and spiritual consciousness, the Somnath Temple is not merely a place of worship, but a living symbol of enduring faith, national identity, and cultural resurgence.

Organised at the Somnath Temple, a vibrant centre of India's ancient civilisation, spiritual tradition, and national pride, the Somnath Swabhiman Parv is a powerful expression of India's historical self-respect and cultural resurgence. In the context of this Parv, the special historical and symbolic significance of the Baanstambh located within the temple premises comes to the fore.

Facing the Arabian Sea within the Somnath Temple premises, the Baanstambh symbolises ancient India's scientific thinking, geographical knowledge, and firm self-confidence. According to the Sanskrit (Gns). In the vast expanse of India's rural heartland, where the rhythm of life still pulses to the beat of monsoons and harvests, a seismic policy shift is underway. For two decades, the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Act (MGNREGA) stood as a beacon of hope for millions, enshrining the right to work as a fundamental entitlement. It was more than a programme; it was a lifeline, guaranteeing 100 days of unskilled manual labor to any rural household that demanded it, backed by the threat of unemployment allowances if the state failed to deliver.

Now, with the advent of the Viksit Bharat-Guarantee for Rozgar and Ajeevika Mission (Gramin) or VB-G RAM G, the government has boldly repealed MGNREGA, signaling a departure from a reactive safety net to a proactive engine of development. This transition, hailed by proponents as a modernization drive aligned with India's ambitions for a 'Viksit Bharat' by 2047, has sparked intense debate. At its core lies a tension between empowering the rural poor through immediate relief and channelling their labour toward enduring national infrastructure. As we dissect this pivot, it becomes clear that while the new scheme offers tantalizing upgrades, it risks unraveling the very fabric of rural security if not navigated with caution.

To grasp the magnitude of this change, one must juxtapose the foundational architectures of MGNREGA and VB-G RAM G. MGNREGA, enacted in 2005, was revolutionary in its demand-driven ethos. It operated on a simple, enforceable principle: rural workers could request employment at their local panchayat and the state had to provide it within 15 days or compensate them for the delay. Funding was overwhelmingly central, with the Union government covering 100 per cent of unskilled wages and a significant portion of materials, ensuring that the scheme could expand organically with need.

This bottom-up model targeted the poorest. Most desperate households naturally sought it out, turning it into a counter-cyclical buffer against economic shocks like droughts or recessions. Over the years, it employed over 50 million households annually, creating assets like wells and roads while injecting wages directly into impoverished economies. VB-G RAM G, in stark contrast, reorients this framework toward a supply-driven paradigm, reclassifying it as a Centrally Sponsored Scheme (CSS) with a 60:40 funding split between the Centre and states (90:10 for special category states like those in the Northeast).

Gone is the open-ended budgeting; in its place are 'normative allocations,' where funds are capped based on predefined metrics such as population, poverty levels and past utilization. This caps the fiscal unpredictability that sometimes ballooned MGNREGA's costs but also introduces rigidity. Proponents argue this fosters fiscal discipline and accountability, compelling states to co-invest and curb inefficiencies like ghost workers through AI-driven monitoring and real-time digital audits. The enhancements in VB-G RAM G are undeniably ambitious. The guaranteed workdays jump from 100 to 125, a 25 per cent boost that could translate to higher household incomes, addressing criticisms that MGNREGA's limit often became a de facto ceiling.

Knowledge Seekers Searching on Google for the Book 'Somanatha-The Shrine Eternal'

People are searching to learn more about the book mentioned by Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi in his article

The book, written on the occasion of the Somnath Temple's reconstruction, chronicles the history of our cultural and spiritual identity.

Gandhinagar, 08 January 2026: It has been a thousand years since the attack on the Somnath Temple by the invader Mahmud of Ghazni. This assault by a foreign invader was akin to a direct strike on India's identity. In the context of this thousand-year history, Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi mentioned a special book in his article, prompting curious readers to search for it on Google.

This book is "Somanatha-The Shrine Eternal", written by K. M. Munshi in 1951. It provides a historical and religious overview of the Somnath Temple. Following its mention by the Prime Minister, the book has become a focal point of discussion and reading, making it part ticularly intriguing to explore.

Gujaratis need no introduction to K. M. Munshi, a beacon of Gujarat's pride. Beyond being a political leader, he was an accomplished writer. His works primarily focused on history, culture, and related subjects. Gujaratis are generally not very accustomed to reading books in English, yet even in English, much has been written about Gujarat and its history, and K. M. Munshi stands out as one of the foremost contributors.

Reading his works, such as Patan ni Prabhu, Jai Somnath, Gujarat No Nath, Bhagna Paduka, and Krishnavatara Parts 1 to 7, offers not only insights into Gujarat's history but also fascinating details about religious figures across different periods and regions.

In "Somanatha-The Shrine Eternal", K. M. Munshi presents a historical and archaeological account of the Shri Somnath Temple, describing it as a symbol of India's identity. The book explains why this temple holds immense significance as a part of India's cultural heritage. With the Somnath Swabhiman Parv currently being celebrated at Somnath, gaining an understanding of this book becomes especially relevant.

The book was published under Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan's 'Books University' series, with the primary objective of blending the fundamental values of Indian culture with modern knowledge.

Munshi wrote the first edition of this book in May 1951 on the occasion of the temple's reconstruction and the consecration of the Jyotirlinga. The author himself acknowledges that, without claiming scholarly expertise, he completed the book in a very short time as a deeply devoted individual and a seeker of history, to present the history of Somnath to the people.

The purpose of this book is to impart higher learning and instil values. Through it, an effort is made to uphold human dignity and establish a moral order, enabling individuals to truly embody the divine.

The book is primarily divided into four parts:

The first part covers the mythological narratives and history of Somnath; The second part, Romance in Stone, explores architecture carved in stone; The third part presents evidence uncovered through archaeological excavations; The fourth part provides details from the writings of Muslim historians and various inscriptions.

The author describes Somnath as the Lord of the Soma and discusses the historical significance of the Prabhas region. Like a phoenix rising from the ashes, the temple—rebuilt repeatedly after destruction—has remained invincible. The book also mentions the sacred site associated with Lord Krishna's cremation.

The book provides a detailed account of the invasions on Somnath—from the destruction by Mahmud of Ghazni in 1025 to the turbulent periods under Alauddin Khilji and Aurangzeb. Munshi portrays this devastation not merely as the ruin of a structure, but as a blow to the nation's spirit.

A significant portion of the book focuses on Somnath's modern revival.

On November 13, 1947, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel took a solemn vow at the sea-facing ruins of the temple, which K. M. Munshi described as the restoration of India's pride.

The book also includes reports of scientific excavations conducted by B. K. Thapar. This section connects the layers of ancient temples, inscriptions, and sculptures uncovered from the earth, offering valuable insights into the temple's ancient architecture, making it highly useful for students of history.

The new editions of the book describe the progress of the construction of the new temple, now known as Kailash Mahameru Prasad, which stands 155 feet tall. The book includes numerous sketches and photographs that vividly showcase Somnath's artistic grandeur.

"Somanatha-The Shrine Eternal" is not merely a history book; it symbolises the unbroken faith of the Indian people.

According to Munshi, Somnath is the Anant Jyoti, connecting India to its cultural roots across generations and inspiring a life lived with pride.

Just as the Ganga River rises in the mountains, flows through countless bends, and reaches the sea while preserving its sanctity, the history of Somnath, despite enduring struggles, has upheld its dignity and remained eternal—a truth vividly portrayed in this book.

India's aviation boom has become a shorthand for its economic momentum. Passenger numbers are rising sharply, airports are expanding, and domestic airlines have placed some of the largest aircraft orders globally. Yet, behind this confidence lies a persistent vulnerability: India remains almost entirely dependent on foreign manufacturers for the aircraft that power this growth.

India's past efforts underline this challenge. Licensed passenger aircraft production in the early years built assembly capability but little design depth, while indigenous programmes targeting 15- to 90-seat regional aircraft struggled to move beyond prototypes and certification delays. Even today, discussions centre on short-haul, 70-100 seat platforms suited to domestic routes, not large mainline jets. These experiences suggest that the bottleneck has never been intent or engineering skill, but the absence of a mature supply chain, certification muscle, and assured scale.

Commercial aircraft manufacturing is unforgiving. It demands not only advanced engineering, but also a dense network of suppliers, globally accepted safety certification, deep capital buffers, and guaranteed long-term orders. Countries that succeed do so after decades of cumulative investment and costly learning curves. India is only now beginning to generate the sustained domestic demand that makes such ventures plausible, but demand alone does not create an ecosystem.

Partnership-based manufacturing is often presented as a shortcut. Such arrangements can deliver early gains in assembly, training, and limited localisation, but they rarely confer full technological control. When critical components and certification pathways remain external, vulnerability persists, and any commercial or geopolitical disruption can quickly expose these limits. There is also a danger in mistaking aircraft shortages for the core problem. India's aviation stress is systemic. Pilot availability, crew planning, maintenance capacity, and regulatory oversight are already under strain.

Recent disruptions caused by planning failures rather than fleet size underscore this reality. Without strengthening these foundations, adding locally built aircraft risks compounding operational fragility. A more credible path lies in sequencing ambition.

history suggests that translating demand into a viable aircraft programme is far more difficult than placing orders.

'We're Going to Make a Lot of Money': Trump on US Control of Venezuela's Oil

(Gns). The United States is signalling plans for extended control of Venezuela's huge oil reserves after recent military strikes and the detention of President Nicolás Maduro. US President Donald Trump has argued that directing Venezuelan oil output could bring major financial gains for Washington while placing the Latin American state under American supervision for many years.

Venezuela's reserves are central to this strategy. The country holds about 303 billion barrels of proven crude, or roughly 17 per cent of global reserves, according to the Associated Press. Despite this scale, years of sanctions, weak investment and mismanagement mean Venezuela currently supplies only around one per cent of the world's oil.

barrels of crude, or 17 percent of global reserves, follow last months or a year, Trump replied that it could inject critical funds into Venezuela's struggling economy at the same time.

Venezuela oil exports under US and Washington supervision

"We will rebuild it in a very profitable way," Trump said, explaining that the US would handle extraction and sales of Venezuelan oil while sharing part of the earnings with Venezuela. Senior US officials have echoed Trump's comments, saying American control over Venezuelan oil exports could last indefinitely under a managed system.

Officials in Washington are also weighing partial relaxation of sanctions on Venezuela's oil industry. The aim is to restart shut production and exports, but under strict US oversight.

Plans include allowing some operations to resume while ensuring that decisions on sales, pricing and destinations remain under American direction for the foreseeable future.

Dr. Madhav Gadgil, the 83-year-old ecologist and owing military strikes and the detention of President Nicolás Maduro; President Donald Trump stated that US energy firms would restore Venezuela's oil infrastructure while overseeing sales and sharing earnings, potentially leading to indefinite control under a managed system.

Russian Submarine Escorts Oil Tanker To

Avoid U.S. Blockade Near Venezuela

(Gns). In the latest development, tension between the U.S. and Russia has grown because Russia sent a submarine to protect an oil tanker that the U.S. Coast Guard was following near Venezuela.

Tensions between the U.S. and Russia have escalated after Russia deployed a submarine to protect an oil tanker, formerly called Bella 1, near Venezuela, which the U.S. Coast Guard was monitoring due to suspicion of violating sanctions against countries like Russia and Venezuela.

The tanker, which is old and empty, was trying to stay away from American patrols. These patrols are meant to stop ships connected to countries that the U.S. has placed trade restrictions on.

The tanker, once called Bella 1, went to Venezuela to pick up oil but couldn't complete the job. Even though it had no oil on board, U.S. officials began following it because they think it's part of a group of ships that secretly move and sell oil for countries under sanctions. These ships often use hidden or illegal routes to sell oil without permission.

According to reports, the Bella 1 attempted to escape a U.S. boarding operation in December and sailed out into the Atlantic Ocean. However, since the Coast Guard continued to monitor it, the crew took steps to disguise the ship.

They painted a Russian flag on its hull, changed its name to Marinera, and updated its registration papers to show Russian ownership. These moves appeared to be an attempt to seek protection under Russia's flag and discourage further pursuit.

U.S. Pursuit Sparks Diplomatic Tension

Moscow is believed to have asked Washington to stop following the vessel, which has now moved away from Venezuelan waters. Russian officials have also claimed that the tanker is a civilian vessel and that the U.S. has no legal reason to intercept it.

Experts say Russia's decision to send a submarine to accompany the tanker is unusual and shows how seriously the country views these maritime confrontations. It also signals Moscow's growing frustration over U.S. sanctions that limit its ability to meanwhile, the U.S. continues to view such ships as part of a wider effort to bypass restrictions on sanctioned nations, including Russia and Venezuela. American naval forces have stepped up patrols in the Atlantic to track these vessels, many of which frequently change their names, ownership records, and flags to avoid detection.

This latest incident adds to the already tense relationship between the U.S. and Russia. What began as an attempt to intercept a single tanker has now become another point of conflict between the two countries.

Analysts believe the confrontation highlights the growing competition at sea, where both powers are using military presence and trade rules to assert control. As the Marinera continues its journey under Russian protection, it remains unclear how the situation will end - but it has clearly deepened mistrust between Washington and Moscow.

CM Omar Abdullah launches JK e-Pathshala, declares 14 districts of J&K fully literate (Gns). Chief Minister Omar Abdullah on Thursday launched JK e-Pathshala — Direct to Home Channel-53, a dedicated educational television channel aimed at supporting school education, particularly for students in far-flung and remote areas of Jammu and Kashmir, marking a major technological intervention in the education sector.

The Chief Minister also launched two newly established digital studios, announced 14 of the 20 districts of Jammu and Kashmir as fully literate, and dedicated 1,010 works completed under Samagra Shiksha during the year 2025-26 to the people.

Addressing the gathering after the launch at the Convention Centre here, Chief Minister Omar Abdullah said that JK e-Pathshala represents a new beginning in the use of technology for strengthening school education.

Congratulating the School Education Department for the initiative, the Chief Minister said that if used effectively, technoling, not replace teachers. "This channel is not to replace the classroom or the teacher. A teacher and a classroom can never be replaced. Technology is meant to fill gaps and support learning," he said, adding that the personal bond between a teacher and a student can never be created by any device or screen.

"Good teachers help even the weakest students cross the limits of their abilities. No technology can compete with a good teacher," he said.

The Chief Minister stressed the need to continuously upgrade teachers' skills and encourage them to use technology as a support tool. He also underlined the importance of responsible use of digital screens, encouraging students to use mobile devices for educational and knowledge-based content while discouraging excessive gaming and non-productive activities.

Stressing the importance of reading habits, the Chief Minister urged parents and teachers to instil in children the habit of reading books, newspapers, and magazines. "If we open the world of books for our children, we open a whole new world for them," he said.

The Chief Minister expressed hope that JK e-Pathshala would be the beginning of a larger digital education ecosystem in J&K. He said that in the future, dedicated channels for each class could be introduced to ensure adequate learning time for every grade.

"No matter how advanced technology becomes, physical teachers will never be replaced," he asserted, calling upon all stakeholders to work together for building a brighter future for the children of Jammu and Kashmir.

He also spoke about quality and regularly updated content on JK e-Pathshala and sought regular feedback from students and teachers to ensure the channel remains relevant and effective.

Highlighting the unique geographical and climatic challenges of Jammu and Kashmir, particularly in its remote districts, the Chief Minister said that the channel would be especially beneficial for students living in isolated areas. "Our students can study in school and then continue learning at home through these channels," he said.

The Chief Minister stressed the need to continuously upgrade teachers'

'Not Mohan Baigan, But It's Mohun Bagan': TMC Slams BJP For Mispronouncing Bengal's Century-Old Football Club

(Gns).

A video clip of Union Sports Minister Mansukh Mandaviya has gone viral as he accidentally mispronounced the names of Bengal's two legendary football clubs - Mohun Bagan and East Bengal. A viral video clip shows Union Sports Minister Mansukh Mandaviya mispronouncing the names of Bengal's football clubs Mohun Bagan and East Bengal, leading to criticism from the Trinamool Congress (TMC), and drawing strong reactions from fans. The incident, which occurred ahead of Prime Minister Narendra Modi's visit to West Bengal, has ignited political debate around cultural sensitivity, referencing Mohun Bagan's historical significance since 1889.

In a strongly worded post, the party said that the Union Sports Minister from Prime Minister Narendra Modi's cabinet could not even pronounce the names of Bengal's century-old football institutions with respect.

The party's post sarcastically explained that it is "Mohun Bagan," not "Mohun Baigan," and "East Bengal," not "East Baigan."

The TMC was quick to use the video to attack the

It added that both clubs are part of Bengal's cultural and emotional identity, and accused the BJP of ignoring the sentiments of the people.

The TMC also used the incident to criticize what it called the "outsider mindset" of BJP leaders, saying they fail to understand Bengal's traditions and deep passion for football.

"Football runs in Bengal's blood," the party wrote, adding that those who look down on Bengal will never understand the emotion behind the game.

Political Reactions and Public Sentiment

The video spread rapidly online, with many users sharing it humorously while others expressed anger. Some football fans said that the mispronunciation showed a lack of awareness about Bengal's history and culture, especially from a minister in charge of sports.

Karnataka at 3% Fiscal Deficit: What It Means for State Spending and Borrowing

(Gns).

Karnataka has reached the 3 percent fiscal deficit limit allowed under the Fiscal Responsibility Act, as higher borrowings support expenditure promised in the 2025-26 budget. Earlier, the state had projected a fiscal deficit of 2.95 percent of gross state domestic product (GSDP), estimated at Rs 90,428 crore.

The tighter fiscal space comes just as Chief Minister Siddaramaiah prepares for what will be a record 17th state budget, expected either in late February or the first week of March. Officials note that the upcoming budget will need to balance growing expenditure demands with limited fiscal room.

Karnataka has reached the 3 percent fiscal deficit limit for the 2025-26 budget, projected at Rs 90,428 crore, attributed to revenue shortfalls and increased borrowing, with the upcoming budget facing a balancing act between expenditure demands and fiscal constraints.

Finance department officials attribute the rise in the deficit to revenue shortfalls, with income growth lagging behind committed spending. The mid-term fiscal plan indicates that actual revenue collections have been lower than anticipated, even as costs for welfare schemes and guarantee programmes across departments continue to rise.

As a result, borrowing levels have increased. "We have begun preparations for this year's budget, and the Chief Minister will have to decide on the approach for the next fiscal," said Ritesh Kumar Singh, Additional Chief Secretary (Finance). He added that borrowings are expected to rise as the year progresses.

"While borrowings may touch Rs 93,000 crore in the fourth quarter, and this year may mark the highest share yet."

Singh noted that states

follow different strategies to manage cash flow depending on past dues and pending bills. "Some states carry a two-month overhang from the previous fiscal year and may need to borrow heavily in the first quarter. Karnataka's situation is more controlled."

State Finance Management

Officials in the finance department emphasise that Karnataka maintains limited payment backlogs at the start of a new financial year. "Our overhang is around two weeks in the first quarter, and overall financial management has been prudent," they said. Borrowings remain aligned with legal limits and planned expenditure.

Budgetary Implications

With the fiscal deficit at the statutory ceiling, the 2025-26 budget will require careful balancing between welfare guarantees, routine administration, and debt management. Officials insist that while pressures are evident, all borrowing and spending decisions remain within the legal framework.

ED officer, who investigated diplomatic gold smuggling case, sacked for bribery, leaking raid information

(Gns). Enforcement Directorate (ED) Deputy Director P Radhakrishnan, who investigated crucial cases, including the diplomatic gold smuggling case, has been removed from service over bribery and leaking raid information.

The Union Finance Ministry issued an order giving him compulsory retirement based on complaints of bribery and leaking of official information. The President signed the order last Friday as part of the extraordinary step taken by the Union government against corruption and malfeasance.

P Radhakrishnan, a native of Thiruvananthapuram, was the officer who led the investigation into the controversial diplomatic gold smuggling case. However, serious allegations were leveled against him, including that he tried to settle the case when the investigation reached a crucial stage. It has been reported that BJP leaders had alleged at that time that he had colluded in sabotaging the investigation and leaking raid information.

The sudden halt to the investigation that had reached the Chief Minister's office had led to major controversies. The main allegation made at the time was that the investigation's lack is learnt that the BJP state leadership had approached the Union Finance Ministry several times with complaints that the investigation into the case was being sabotaged. They had alleged that the case was sabotaged due to an unholy collusion between some officials of the investigating agencies and some in the ruling party.

Swapna Suresh had later revealed that a bribe of Rs 30 crore was taken to settle the gold smuggling case. It was in the backdrop of these allegations that the Intelligence Bureau conducted a detailed investigation and filed a report against Radhakrishnan.

Such strict action against top officials of the ED itself is being seen as a move by the central government to restore the credibility of the force.

of progress after the arrest of Swapna Suresh, M Sivashankar and others was part of a compromise.

Despite being promoted and transferred to Chennai, to complete the investigation of the case, he remained in Kochi. Later, he looked into some matters, including the Karuvannur bank fraud case, but was not given any major responsibilities. Meanwhile, an internal investigation conducted by the Ministry of Finance found that there was merit in the complaints against him, including allegations of bribery and information leakage. Based on this, it was recommended that he be dismissed from service.

central government service. The compulsory retirement was carried out under Fundamental Rule 56(j), a provision that empowers the central government to remove officials from service for alleged corruption or inefficiency in the public interest.

P Radhakrishnan played a major role in the investigation of the diplomatic gold smuggling case. He was at the forefront of interrogating and arresting former principal secretary to the Chief Minister M Sivashankar and Swapna Suresh.
